Dodgers finally playing like champs

Gabe Lacques
USA TODAY

To call it inevitable now would be dishonest.

The Dodgers were in real jeopardy of failing to win the National League West, despite a relative super team assembled with a $275 million payroll, despite MVPs spilling out of the dugout like Hall of Famers crammed into a clown car, despite sporting so much depth they more or less ensured one All-Star a night would find himself parked on the bench.

Now that they are here, finally climbing atop the unsinkable Giants to claim first place for the first time since April 28, there truly is a sense they will never look back.

Certainly, the final month of the season will see the Giants and Dodgers bob above and beneath the surface and perhaps exchange the West lead multiple times. It may play out that way this weekend at Oracle Park, where the Giants host a three-game series that had the looks of a showdown but now feels more like a requiem for the home team.

Yes, the Dodgers are those dudes, winners of 18 of their last 22 games and methodically erasing a divisional deficit that was five games as recently as Aug. 13, a hole that actually deepened in the two weeks after they stunned the industry with a trade-deadline haul that included All-Stars Max Scherzer and Trea Turner.

Now? There's a good chance the Dodgers may, in fact, be unstoppable, not just now but all the way through October. Here's why:

- It's been nearly two months since what we might call Scherzer's nadir, a mind-boggling 3 ⅔-inning debacle in which Mad Max blew most of an 8-0 lead and suffered the indignity of yielding a grand slam to Padres relief pitcher Daniel Camarena.

Scherzer hasn't lost since.

Including his final start with the Nationals – a showcase of sorts, since he'd missed a turn with a minor triceps issue – Scherzer has been money, posting a 1.32 ERA, yielding a .505 OPS against, striking out 55 against eight walks.

- Slugging first baseman Max Muncy, who may become the first waiver claim to win an MVP award, is now tied atop the NL leaderboard with Fernando Tatis Jr. in Wins Above Replacement, which may prove a significant tiebreaker come voting time if Tatis' Padres miss the playoffs. While Muncy's 30 homers are six fewer than Tatis' 36, a deeper look at Muncy's numbers reveal he's morphed into what we might call the perfect hitter.

- Should the Dodgers win the World Series, the jewelry bill may be a bit more exorbitant. After all, even Kevin Quackenbush will get a championship ring – glittery thanks for that one-third of an inning he contributed to the cause.

But sometimes, that's what it takes to build a better bullpen – throwing as many arms at the wall as possible to see what sticks. In 2021, with pitchers coming off a truncated and arrhythmic 2020 season, a wide casting call was all the more important.

And so the Dodgers have trotted out 37 pitchers this year – yeah, that's the equivalent of three entire staffs – to take down innings. And after months of injuries (Dustin May, Tony Gonsolin, Clayton Kershaw), insolence (Trevor Bauer) and ignominy (Justin Turner, one inning), the Dodgers have arrived at a very good place with their staff.

Even if Kershaw fails to come all the way back from an elbow injury – or can only provide limited servings of innings – the trinity of Walker Buehler, Scherzer and Julio Urias gives them a significant edge on any staff this side of Milwaukee.

Yet come October, relief can matter almost as much. And the Dodgers have stumbled upon an enticing mix, starting with Kenley Jansen. Veterans Blake Treinen (0.93 WHIP) and Joe Kelly (1.06) are punching out more than 10 batters per nine in setup situations. But it's the emergence of rookies Alex Vesia and Phil Bickford who lengthen this group and could provide sufficient cover into October.

SPORTS HOT TAKES

McCarthy on Newton

The Cowboys held their first regular-season practice Thursday in Frisco, Texas. Cam Newton, the 2015 NFL MVP, was not among them. Nor will he be in the imminent future, head coach Mike McCarthy intimated. “To sit here and talk about any of the players not on our roster, I don't think there's really anything that's beneficial that comes out of that for us,” he said of Newton, a free agent after the Patriots released him Tuesday. “But Cam, I've had a chance to compete against Cam, chance to watch some of his tape in New England. I still think he has a ton of football left. But we're very excited about the group that we have.” Dak Prescott leads the position room, fifth-year veteran Cooper Rush the front-runner to back him up. – Jori Epstein

Larson sees playoffs as just another step

Kelly Crandall

RACER magazine | USA TODAY Network

Kyle Larson has a very business-as-usual mindset for the next 10 weeks, despite being the most important part of the NASCAR Cup Series season.

Larson enters the postseason as the No. 1 seed and is considered the favorite for the title. Doing so is “cool,” Larson said, and a nice accomplishment for his Hendrick Motorsports team. But Larson also acknowledges that a lot can happen in the next 10 weeks, and the favorite doesn't always win.

“So, I don't think we need to put any more pressure on ourselves or anything like that,” Larson said. “Just go out there and keep trying to execute like we've been doing all season long, and hopefully it'll all work itself out.”

This is a new position for Larson, yet he's not fazed or stressed about it.

“No, not at all,” Larson said. “I haven't really thought much about it. I think you just take it week by week and just do a good job on the weekends. If you have a bad week, you're always looking forward to the Larson has been dominant. Five wins and 1,566 laps led helped Larson charge to the regular-season championship over Denny Hamlin in the final few weeks.

The summer months were the best Larson has ever had in the Cup Series. Larson took three straight wins in Charlotte, Sonoma and Nashville, plus the All-Star Race in Texas. In that stretch, he led 665 laps.
